An ancient philosopher once observed that an unexamined life is not worth living—questions invite us to discover who we are and to see life through a new lens. What if we truly took time to reflect and question?

In this thought-provoking book based on decades of her own self-examination and discovery, Ann Smith poses 125 questions about everyday life and faith. Ann is passionate about fostering authentic growth through asking questions, and just a few of these particular ponderings that have become a vital part of her journey include:

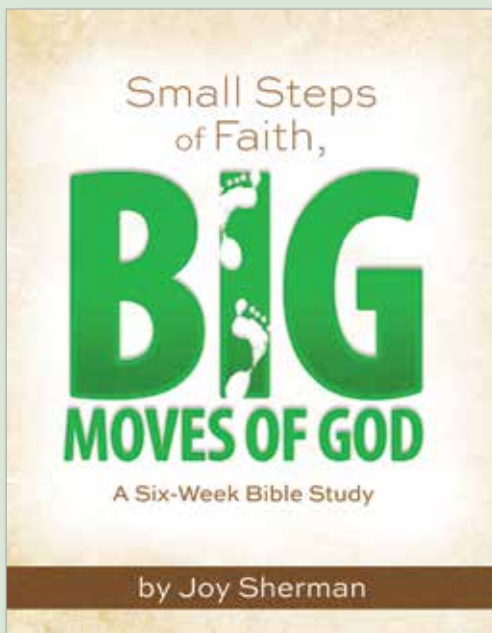

What if my expectations allow for only one acceptable outcome?

What if, because I have lived, the world will somehow be different?

What if I spent more time bringing healing to my relationships than trying to focus on who is to blame?

What if I allow the labels I wear or the titles I am given to become my identity?

These and over 120 other questions are presented to the reader along with lovely, muted, Japanese-style illustrations that encourage peaceful, thoughtful reflection. The cover of this beautiful, keepsake book contains gold foil accents as a finishing touch, making it a perfect gift for family and friends.
